Marjorie M. Smith EDITOR-PUBLISHER

The Baltimore Antiques Dealers Association is becoming increasingly concerned about "home" dealers who refuse to bother themselves with any of the local, State, and Federal laws. Unlicensed for retail selling they pay no fees or levies, are spared other types of overhead costs that must be born by licensed dealers, and in turn are able to either undersell, or net considerable more profit than legitimate dealers, operating as such and observing regulation business principles. It is reported that some of these unlicensed operators sell only to a select list of customers who must know the password before they can make a purchase. Law enforcement men admit they are difficult to catch. Those few who are caught are only penalized with a fine and are back in business afterward. Baltimore cannot be the only city that has this problem. What about your town? Have other associations of licensed dealers experienced the same problem? If so, what have they done to solve it? Baltimore dealers are expected to ask city officials to crack down on their unlicensed competitors.

Water*ville*, Water*town*, and Water*vliet*, Mr. David Lane of the Water*town* Daily Times tells us are three towns in New York state that occasionally confuse writers unfamiliar with their existence. And we made the slip ourselves in the George Eastman Birthplace story, October 1955 issue. This home which we reported was moved to Rochester, was moved from Waterville, N. Y., not Watertown as stated. So won't you turn back to your October issue and change the -town to -ville? Our thanks to both Mr. Lane and one of our Watertown subscribers, Mrs. John A. Millard who called the error to his attention, and others who wrote us.

Ad readers, who are potential buyers, would like to see approximate weights, especially of heavy pieces, in all advertising. It would give them some idea as to transportation cost, and save some of that endless correspondence.

Recent and vigorous comments insist that: a stamp should be sent to the dealer with every order containing a check; and that all unused shipping charges be returned to the buyer, no matter how small the amount. Dealers have been known to receive as many as 80 checks for a single advertised item. This means that 79 checks must be returned which in postage alone (not counting envelopes and time) would cost the dealer $2.37. As to shipping charges, because buyers can only estimate in advance, they frequently send an excess. Their contention is that when some dealers will write them for as little as a 6¢ shortage, by the same token the dealer should return to them any excess.

Such problems have become greater with the proportionate increase in mail order selling in the past two decades. It would seem that some standard system could be devised by the seller, for universal use, that would be of greater convenience to the buyer, and in turn mutually profitable to both. This magazine would be happy to hear the ideas of any dealers. Perhaps if enough practical suggestions were accumulated and sifted down into one set of plans, the mail order selling of antiques might be revolutionized—for the good of all.

Being a specialist on certain antiquities can have its headaches as well as its glories. Many of the authorities are lamenting the increasing requests for identification and appraisal, most of which are asked at their own expense. I am told that one inquiring collector submitted to one noted authority a full page of difficult questions. In return for their being researched he promised to show his appreciation by buying this author's books. Some send cartons of merchandise requesting verification of its authenticity. They include so nominal a sum in payment that the return express charges exceed the token gratuity. Others submit queries necessitating skilled and lengthy research without even a self-addressed envelope for reply.

These authorities wonder if such collectors and dealers realize that: it costs more than one dollar to write a business letter today; packing materials, labor, and return postage is costly; the amount of time required for them to personally research some of those heretofore unexploited items. Perhaps the inquirer does not intend an imposition, or fails to think that he is not the only one bombarding an author with urgent requests for free services. It's something to think about, but if one feels he must write an author for help, and he should first exhaust all other sources (including the author's published works), why not follow these few rules of courtesy? Be brief and comprehensive about the item in question; include a clear picture if possible and a self-addressed, stamped envelope that will fit the picture if it is to be returned; and inquire before daring to send cartons of merchandise. There's a postal ruling that protects the recipient, NOT the sender, regarding the shipping of unrequested packages. Most experts are glad to help, but remember that in most cases their profession is their livelihood and their service a favor, not necessarily a part of their job.

February 29, 1956—an extra day in this year's calendar. And who can't use an extra day? Let's make the most of it and the 306 that follow in 1956.

MEMO FROM: Marcia

To Arms, To Arms! Back in 1947, in Baltimore, Md., six collectors of Arms met to form a little association—to discuss their hobby, learn from each other, and promote interest in Arms collecting generally. By 1949 the group had expanded to such extent it was incorporated as The Maryland Arms Collectors Association, Inc., a not-for-profit corporation. Today some of the most prominent Arms collectors and dealers in the country are listed among its more than 135 members. Last year, this enthusiastic group held an exhibit of arms, and this most successful venture will be repeated this year. The dates are February 4 and 5; the place, the spacious Charles Room of the Sheraton-Belvedere Hotel in Baltimore. There'll be 70 exhibits of guns, swords, pistols, flasks, books, etc., and the highlight will be an Auction,

Saturday evening at eight. The revolver pictured, from the collection of John N. Wetzelberger, Jr., Towson, Md., is one that was presented to Brevet Brigadier General R. H. K. Whitely (1813-1896), a Marylander. It is delicately engraved, with grips made of wood from the famous Charter Oak.

Rookwood Again: From Miss Emma D. King of Adamsville, R. I. comes a query. She writes, concerning the recent article on Rookwood (Sept. '55): "I have been a collector of this beautiful ware since the days when people said: 'Rookwood? Why bother with it? It's American—and not even old!' The result of my obstinacy, or perseverance, whichever you choose to call it, is that I have over 120 pieces representing nearly every year of its manufacture and types, each piece, of course, signed and dated under glaze. I wonder if anyone else has as large a collection?"

Hoo Collects Owls? The Seattle, Washington, Times recently carried a Sunday feature on Mrs. John J. O'Brien's collection of owls, which Mrs. O'Brien sent on to us with the note, "I know there are many owl collectors in the East and I know of several on our West Coast. It would be nice if someone would try to get them all together. I know I would love to hear of others". Others, we know, would like to hear of Mrs. O'Brien's collection, for it's a fabulous one! Intrigued by the wise old birds when, as a child of seven, she was given an owl pitcher, she has been collecting ever since, until she has just lost count of the number. All her pieces have historic, practical or decorative appeal. Their uses are as varied as the expressions in their quaint owl faces, and many take an active part in the O'Brien home life. For instance, on a desk, the owl appears on letter rack, paperweight, inkwell, envelope opener and bookends. Elsewhere, andirons, pillow shams, candelabra, corkscrews, tobacco jars and doorstops echo the owl motif. There are collections within the collection, such as groups of owl pitchers, owl banks, owl salt and peppers, and of course, owl buttons. Some are centuries old, like the quaint Japanese jar with removable head; a few like her decorative white owl lamp are modern. Only the stuffed variety is omitted!

The Junto: If we could live in Philadelphia for just one reason, it would be on account of The Junto — America's Oldest and Largest School for Adults, a non-profit civic endeavor founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1727, and reorganized in 1941 by the citizens of Philadelphia. It offers day and night weekly classes (9 weeks for $5) in practically every subject under the sun — and we wish every city in the country would follow this example! Courses are given in everything from Advertising, Antiques, Arithmetic for Business, through Furniture Refinishing, Home Decorating, Philosophy, Square Dancing and Tray Painting right down to Vocabularly Building and Writing Juvenile Fiction. (We just can't list them all.) One course that should appeal particularly to antiquers is in China Mending, with classes for beginners, for advanced students and in color application, all taught by William Karl Klein, whose china repair set is known to all readers of Spinning Wheel advertisements. Junto also offers a weekend residential school, on a beautiful Main Line college campus, where a different subject is offered each weekend. Inexpensive, too! The Junto's address for further information is Junto Bldg., 12th & Walnut, Philadelphia 7, Penna.

An "A" For An "O": Miss Mary C. Whitlock of Wakefield, R. I., has more than a scholarly interest in calling attention to the misspelling of the French Huguenot name of Elias Boudinot, which occurred in Americana on Canvas (Nov. '55), for she is the lineal descendant of this well known early Philadelphia silversmith. We are tempted (and yield) to quote below from the little verse that hangs over our proofreader's desk for it exactly expresses our chagrin at such a typographical error!

The Typographical Error

The typographical error is
  A slippery thing and shy;
You can hunt it 'til you're dizzy
  But somehow it will get by.

'Til the forms are off the presses,
  It is strange how still it keeps;
It shrinks down in a corner
  And it never stirs or peeps.

That typographical error,
  Too small for human eyes
'Til the ink is on the paper,
  When it grows to MOUNTAIN size.

The remainder of the issue
  May be clean as clean can be,
But the typographical error
  Is the only thing you see!

Valuable Valentines

By Amelia E. MacSwiggan

Although the commemoration of St. Valentine's Day has been acclaimed as being an Anglo-Saxon custom inaugurated several centuries past, the sending of valentines has once again become a practice of universal favor. Not only has this custom been revived, but it has also created a keen interest among many persons who have delved into their origin and history, their makers and the many aspects connected with their manufacture. A great deal of pleasure and satisfaction may be derived from a study of valentines and publications of excellent form are now available on the subject, offering a great deal of valentine history. Collectors of valentines have much to appreciate in these publications which are filled with information resulting from years of research, both in this country and in Europe.

Many years previous to their manufacture in this country, most of the valentines which were sent or received here were imported from foreign lands. England, France, Germany and Switzerland manufactured lovely specimens for the American trade, and these have become today, precious items continuously being sought by ardent collectors throughout the country. One has but to attend a meeting of valentine enthusiasts to realize the vast field which can be covered through a serious study of these paper love-tokens. New names are being discovered as time goes on and new products are being presented in the form of rare specimens which are continually appearing many of which perhaps, had been tucked away for years with other mementoes and half-forgotten memorabilia in an attic or in some other storage space.

Our earliest valentines in this country were probably the handmade models which were fashioned right in the home. Shops and stationers sold the various materials necessary for making valentines similar to those imported from Europe and boxes filled with such items as decorative papers, paper laces, satins, silks, rice-paper, insertions of flowers, feathers, figures of cupid, or lovers, birds, mirrors, grasses, seaweeds, imitations of precious stones and fancy ribbons helped the home decorator to copy or fashion at will such valentines as the fancy desired. Although this early custom of making valentines at home has slowed down, it has never actually ceased, and of recent years, complete kits have reappeared on our markets, filled with beautiful materials with which school children make their own individual models.

Popular during the early nineteenth century were the so-called "valentine-writers." These "writers" consisted of small booklets put out by several publishing houses, containing appropriate verses to be copied and added to the home-made valentine. Long before they were published in America, valentine-writers were used in England and many were sent to this country for the trade. From about 1835 to the 1850s, they were being made here and were presented in two different forms, those which were meant for the comic valentines and the others for the sentimental types. Undoubtedly the sentimental verses proved more popular than the comics. Some of the valentine-writers were as amusing as their titles which were made to appeal to the young people for this occasion. Such popular titles as "Cupid's Cabinet," "Lovers' Pastime" and "Delights of Love" are a few examples of their allure which helped their sales in no small way.

Ladies' Magazines including Godey's, often contained directions and suggestions for making valentines at home. Lace-like paper work suggested for the embellishment of the home-made valentine was produced by the use of tiny scissors, penknife, needle and pin, and directions, like those for needlework, were exchanged between boys and girls.

Besides the lacy and dainty folding valentines, new innovations appeared from time to time. Movable or mechanical examples were made some time during the 1840s. Thread was used to hold certain figures together, the manipulation of which revealed or unfolded a scene in a cottage; or the doors of a tiny church might be made to open, or a garden gate portraying a gathering or wedding ceremony might open and close, thus producing charming effects.

During the mid-19th century, the valentine industry had expanded to such an extent that over three million specimens were sold. Their prices ranged from a few pennies a piece to as much as thirty dollars for an exceptionally fine one. As demands increased, merchants and manufacturers alike realized that valentines were a profitable item. Because of the tremendous output each year, in due time the art-work of the valentine began to lessen and one can readily see fine workmanship give way to a coarser and less refined product. Minute details were not as carefully attended to while over-decoration and gaudy papers were used, some being in rather poor taste insofar as art itself was concerned. The valentines which followed, especially those made during the nineties, were examples of "mass production" a situation affecting other products of this same era. Some of these valentines are in demand by collectors today however, and a ready market for them seems to prevail at the moment.

In collecting valentines, one should strive to gather the finer specimens, taking into consideration the artists who designed them, their locale and the periods of their production. Such names as Dobbs, Meek, Kershaw, Mansell, King, Howland, Hughes, Windsor, Tegg, Gilk, Mullord, Fairburn, Wood, Burke, Marks, Mossman, Park, Rimmel and DelaRue, are among the better known makers and should not be overlooked. Their values increase with the years and collectors are eager to add odd examples to their collections. Due to the fact that a valentine made by Bailey in 1788 was sold for one hundred dollars in 1948, it behooves everyone to save such tokens, for as time goes on, their values certainly do not lessen.

In considering American-made valentines, perhaps the most outstanding figure who helped to popularize this item was Esther Howland of Worcester, Massachusetts. Miss Howland was born in 1828, the daughter of Southworth and Esther Howland. Her father was a stationer in Worcester, and her interest in valentines became active after she had received one from England with which she was so fascinated that she made several copies of it. From this simple beginning at home, Miss Howland created a business in this country which became most enterprising. Orders were sent to England for lacy papers, colored papers, boxes of trimmings etc., so that Miss Howland could satisfy the demands of local customers. (A complete and interesting account of her business as it grew to the extent that in one year she netted around $100,000. is available in Ruth Webb Lee's interesting book on Valentines.) Miss Howland's life was practically spent making valtines. She hired many girls and some artists of renown were connected with her firm in one way or another. It is interesting to note that her father also published a valentine-writer under title of "The Ladies and Gentlemen's Sentimental Valentine-Writer." Miss Howland sold her business to the George Whitney Company and after the death of her father, she removed to Quincy, Massachusetts, where she lived until her death in 1904.

George C. Whitney, owner of the Whitney Greeting Card Company of Worcester, was one of a family who dealt in the stationery business. Several of his brothers were at one time affiliated with him but as time passed on, George C. Whitney alone was responsible for the fine quality and workmanship in valentines bearing his mark. He imported some fine papers and novelties from England with which he enhanced his products and he continued to follow the methods inaugurated by Esther Howland. This pursuance no doubt helped to develop Whitney's great success in this field. Due to his remarkable business ability, he built up such a good business that he was able to buy out several small firms dealing in valentines, finally being owner of the Taft Valentine business and the New England Valentine Company as well. Because of the increased volume of his business, Mr. Whitney was obliged to move into larger quarters but in 1910, he met with a disastrous fire from which he recovered and continued to expand his works up to the time of his death in 1915. A son, Warren A. Whitney took over the business and continued to operate until 1942.

Comic valentines are another type of collectible items and many persons enjoy their quaint and humorous quotations, their fabulous representations of people, and their grotesque decorations. They were published by well established firms along with their other products and were placed on sale in small grocery stores as well as stationery stores, drug stores and tobacco shops. Well known firms producing comic valentines were the Elton & Co., the A. J. Fisher and Thomas W. Strong, Charles P. Heustis of New York, Charles Magnus and the McLoughlin Brothers, who became well known in paper products of all kinds. There were many others who successfully made comics many of which were signed.

During the year 1857, valentine sales amounted to over a quarter of a million dollars. This volume of business affected many firms, especially those furnishing papers, silks and satins, fringes, flowers and mosses, valentine writers and other products necessary for making valentines. Along with the greeting card business, the valentine production of today has once more reached a considerable volume. Although their appearance has changed somewhat, modern valentines are still embellished with lace-papers, tinfoil, ribbons, plastic oddities and other decorations, and in due time, these love-tokens will also become collectible items for hobbyists.

Phyfe Mechanical Table

With its fold-over leaf, this table could serve as a side table of console-type as pictured. But for use as a card table, two of its legs move mechanically to form a perfect tripod support. The wood gearing, shafting, etc., are concealed in the pedestal, base, and under-section of the top. In all mahogany, its demi-cartouche shaped top with clover-leaf corners, carved and reeded legs and pedestal, apron faced with "plum pudding" mahogany, and classic quality, make it a much sought item of furniture. Nearly every table of this type is credited to Phyfe's shops and given a date range 1810-1820. This particular example 29" high, 35½" wide, was sold in 1954 for $550.

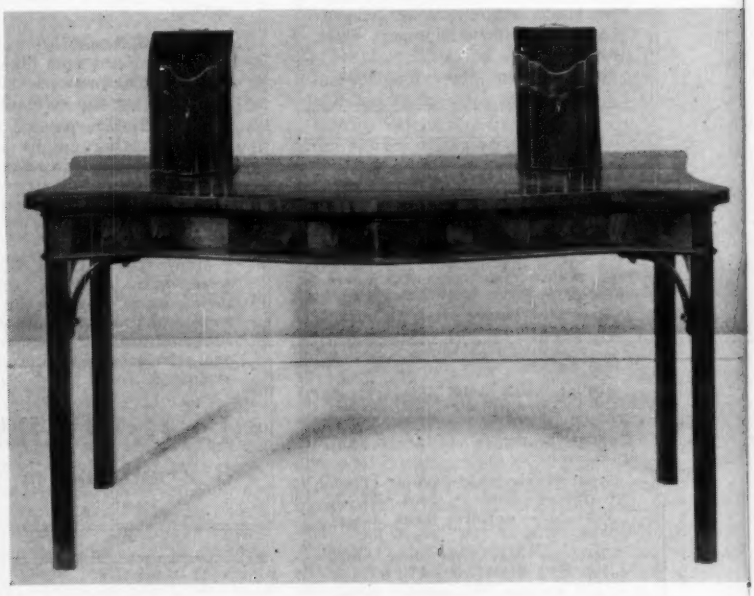
18th Century Hepplewhite Chair

Whether made by George Hepplewhite, or in his shops under the direction of his widow Alice, trading as A. Hepplewhite & Co., is not as important as this evidence that an English cabinetmaker did make French baroque. America, too, was influenced by French design from which resulted our so-called Victorian, a style prevailing from 1830 to 1870 and later. This chair with curvilinear frame is carved from mahogany; its cabriole legs carved with leaf and blossom design.



Chippendale Sideboard Table

Designed and designated by Chippendale as a sideboard table, this piece functioned NOT for dining, but for the service of food from its location at the side of a dining room. English in origin with the simpler aspects of Chinese influence, its 5' 7" long serpentine front is of inlaid mahogany. The legs are chamfered, the height 35½". Since Chippendale designs were copied in America from 1755 to 1790, an American example would be highly prized. The serpentine front knife boxes of mahogany with holly-wood inlay are in the Hepplewhite style, so popular from 1783 to 1800.

Marble glass, a type of glass which is often erroneously called "slag" and "End-of-the-Day".

Dispel Nebulous Nomenclatures by Knowing . . .

Correct Glassware Designations

By Ruth Webb Lee

THE collecting of our old glass in this country is still in its infancy, relatively speaking. During the past three decades a tremendous amount of important research has been accomplished, which in turn has resulted in creating real students of most of our present-day collectors. This has certainly been a step in the right direction. However, a few misconceptions of the past were bound to die a slow death. For instance, twenty to thirty years ago we often heard the term "camphor glass". Camphor was regarded as a household necessity in the early days, when families in the country often consulted their medical books for home remedies. Many bureaus held bottles of camphor, which sometimes crystallized, thus coating the inside of the glass containers with the spirits of camphor, after the alcohol had evaporated. This frosted effect brought about the term "camphor glass"—meaning a frosted appearance. To this day, of glass having a frosted or satin finish, we occasionally hear referred to in this way.

Another old term from by-gone days, used to describe purple marble glass, or almost any opaque-white glass having a scroddled effect in another color, was "Slag". My dictionary defines slag as "a product of smelting, containing, mostly as silicates, the substances not sought to be produced as matte or metal, and having a lower specific gravity than the latter. The slag of iron blast furnaces is essentially silicate of calcium, magnesium, and aluminum; that of lead and copper smelting furnaces contains iron silicate."

It may also mean "the scoriaceous lava from a volcano."

Now isn't it difficult to understand how such a tag ever became attached to any of our old marbelized glass?

Probably the hardest myth of all to kill is the "End-of-the-Day" tale. It seems to have persisted longer than any of the others; at least, it may still be heard more frequently. I seem to doubt if any two or three people would describe what they honestly believe to be "End-of-the-day" glass and come out with a description of the same type, or color, of glass. The old-time story had it that at the end of the day, the glassworkers in our early factories could have whatever remained in the glass furnace, to create whatever they desired, for themselves, or for their friends. To a small extent, this was true. However, the further assertion has been that these men gathered a bit of the remaining glass from each pot, the inference being that they varied in color, and the net result would be a purple and white glass or that which is termed Marble glass today! Originally it was known as "Mosaic".

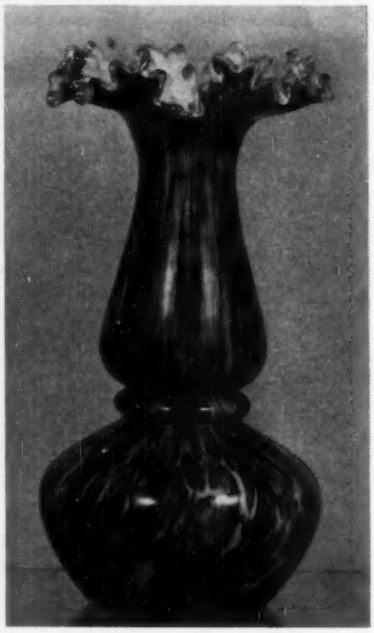
Can anyone explain how glassworkers could mix up a conglomerate mass of color and come up with an opaque-purple and white? Does it make any sense? The Mosaic glass was a deliberate mixture. All colored glass was produced from a deliberate mixture.

There are also those whose understanding of "End-of-the-Day" is what is known as "Spatter" now. This ware was produced by breaking pieces of various colored glass and spreading them out on the marver. The glassblower rolled his gather over the small broken colored pieces, blew it, warmed it in, and then finished the article. The result is what is termed "Spatter" glass. The worker could control the spatter by choosing the broken pieces in respect to color or, as is more usual, he could spread them in haphazard fashion. Thus there could be blue and white spatter, or pink and white spatter (or any other combination), or a variegated coloring. A great deal of this type of glass was made in northern Indiana.

The term "End-of-the-Day" is a modern descriptive title, which was unknown in the days when Mosaic and Spatter were made.

We trust this explanation of how certain obsolete expressions as applied to glass came about will help to clarify the matter for future collectors.



Spangled glass vase, wrongly referred to as "End-of-the-Day".

BOOK REVIEWS

Old Virginia Houses, The Mobjack Bay Country by Emmie Ferguson Farrar. Hastings House. December 1955. $10.

"Back from the Ware, on the Tidewater Trail in Gloucester, on the original grant of land to the honorable Lewis Burwell, of Carter's Creek, stands White Marsh. The grant for the land was made in the very early days of Gloucester's history, which began in the 1640's. White Marsh was the early seat of the Whitings, and remained in the possession of that family over a period of years. They built the main part of the present mansion about 1750. It was then a simple Georgian Colonial house, without wings or pillars."

The above paragraph is indicative of the range of coverage Miss Farrar has employed in bringing the reader face-to-face with this section of Virginia, its peoples, and its history.

Since the Mobjack Bay empties into the Chesapeake Bay, it afforded these Virginians not only beautiful homesites and good farmlands, but like the famous James River, waterfront transportation facilities of so high a value in the early days. Up the York, Severn, and Ware Rivers each of which empty into Mobjack Bay, and inland on the parcels of land jutting down like fingers which separate these rivers, are those Virginia countryside homes the author has found worthy of being permanently recorded.

Well furnished interiors, landscaping, varieties of native trees, architectural details and their later restorations extend the value of the work to garden enthusiasts, decorators, and antiquarians alike. Each establishment is illustrated with the finest photographic reproductions and is accompanied by its own little essay. Thomas Jefferson, General Robert E. Lee, The Washington family, and other eminent Virginians who occupied and visited these historic places bring the social activities and family histories into focus with the tangible aspects. Perhaps one of the most enjoyable features of the book is inclusion of a goodly number of modest examples of homes which are of no less credit to Virginia's great heritage.

The Weathercock Crows by Lawrence Romaine. Publ. by Weathercock House, Middleboro, Mass. ($3)

Lawrence Romaine is no stranger to Spinning Wheel readers who recall his "Antiques of India Rubber" (sep '50), "Christmas Tree Ornaments and Toys" (dec '50), "Barber Shop Glassware from Bohemia" (apr '53) and "How Much An Antique is Worth" (june '54), and his whimsey has been periodically enjoyed by the many "Book Worms" who receive his fascinating mimeographed Rare Books lists. "The Weathercock Crows," a sally into verse, is he says the result of living for more than a score of years on and with thirty-five acres in the country. It might be catalogued as a short philosophy born of bookselling. The verse has a happy wisdom and heartwarming humor, creating a simple folksy picture of life at Weathercock House, a 1750 North Middleton, Mass., farmhouse, restored by the author and his wife. While most of the rhymes pertain to the bookselling world, some few are universal in their appeal. Certainly "Through the Years" echoes the worried plaint of all "too busy" people:

Long years ago when books were scarce,
and reading was a pleasure,
They entertained the human race in goodly, Godly measure;
But in our times of radio and television shows,
Just when a man can read a book, the good Lord only knows.

And who has not bewailed with his "Country Telephone,"

Why does the telephone have to ring
when somebody's at the door,
And the vacuum cleaner is howling its song over the living room floor?

Antiques dealers as well as booksellers will be in full accord with his "Greener Pastures":

Other fields are always greenest,
One's own stock by far the meanest,
One's own shelves of sleepers leanest,
One's best copies never cleanest.

Still all hope flames eternal
In this world of fads infernal,
And since these belong to me
Their true merits you may see.

Illustrations, which cleverly catch the humor of the author are done by Emily Monsarrat, who is, in addition to being an illustrator of many books, one of the few Americans successful in producing the laborious detail required for manuscripts as done by the monks in the Middle Ages.

Pennsylvania Clocks and Clockmakers by George Eckhart. Devin-Adair Company, New York. November 1955. $15.

In facile style the author begins this 229 page volume with concise data on the history and development of clock mechanism. His progress from such chapters as "The Dial of Ahaz" to Molyneux's "Concerning the Astronomical Equation of Time" divulges certain material heretofore not covered in any American work on the subject. For example, here is the first published American translation of the rare Huygens "Horologium"*, a highly important contribution to horological enthusiasts.

Not only do the excellent illustrations of fine tall case examples, dials and their decorations, and diagrams of mechanisms whet the student's appetite, but the reproductions of portraits of some of the better known clockmakers with their biographical sketches enlarge the coverage of this work over and above a mere list of makers.

And it is evident the author considered such list secondary to the more complete historical facts on which he has concentrated. Omission of some makers, causing his list to be incomplete to date, leaves the researcher something to be desired. Whether due to lack of space, or no, it would seem that in the alphabetical listing some of the annotations could have been curtailed at not too severe a sacrifice and replaced with additional listings. The fact that a clockmaker "made a clock for each of his four daughters" seems relatively unimportant compared to the same space being used to list yet another Pennsylvania clockmaker.

Certainly no dealer or collector can afford to miss the section on appraising. Even though time cannot help but dissipate such efforts at establishing dollar values, the foundation figures therein should be of considerable assistance to all who buy or sell. Equally valuable is the lengthy chapter on repair and restoration.

Perhaps the greatest disappointment in the work will be to the true scholar when he observes Mr. Eckhardt's assumption that Dr. Christopher Witt's oil painting of Magister Johannes Kelpius, done in 1706, was "probably the first" oil painting made in the Colonies. Thus far, the first oil paintings done in the Colonies have been rightly attributed to the Colonies of New Amsterdam and New England. "17th Century Painting in New England" by Louisa Dresser, published by The Worcester Art Museum, makes attribution, fact, and documentation in respect of the New England portraits. No less than forty portraits of New England people survive, every one of which was painted before, and some long before, the Witt-Kelpius picture! Similarly, the oil paintings done in the Hudson Valley before 1706 pose a considerable company.

Regardless of this glaring error, the value of the book is not in its commentary on early American art, but in its otherwise good coverage of timepiece history—coverage not only of interest to collectors and students of Pennsylvania clocks, but to those everywhere who buy, sell, or repair time keepers.

—Carl W. Drepperd

* Christiaan Huygens, inventor of pendulum-controlled clock, 1656. His "Horologium" published in 1658 claims the invention and explains it.

WHOLESALE TO DEALERS

THE GUN COLLECTOR

By R. O. Ackerman

Whitneyville-Walker Colt

There are several reasons why the Whitneyville-Walker Colt Dragoon Pistol is absolutely unique in its field. These factors place it squarely at the top of the list, for desirability for almost every American gun collector!

First of all, the "Walker" was the very first Colt six-shooter! (The earlier Colt Paterson models were five-shot.) It is the largest and heaviest revolver ever made by any American manufacturer — a terrific 4 pounds, 9 ounces! Add its unusually fascinating history, plus extreme rarity. Small wonder that top collecors have paid $2500.00 or more for a fine example!

Texas' war for independence from Mexico had become a thrilling reality, and the cry of "Remember the Alamo!" was inflaming the land. Desperate for improved weapons to turn the tide of battle, General Zachary Taylor thought of Sam Colt. "Old Rough and Ready" Taylor dispatched Captain Samuel Hamilton Walker to find Colt, and order 1000 of his "revolving pistols."

Colt's first attempt at arms manufacturing had failed some years previously, and he had to advertise for one of his earlier model revolvers to use as a pattern. He and the ex-ranger captain then incorporated various improvements upon the Paterson design. The new model was massive, to withstand the most powerful loads. The cylinder had six chambers rather than five—that extra shot could save a trooper's life!

Some of the parts were made, and assembly was performed, at the Whitneyville, Connecticut, rifle armory of Eli Whitney (son of the inventor of the cotton gin).

Only about 1100 Whitneyville-Walkers were made, which accounts for their extreme rarity. This model may be identified by the marking "U. S. 1847" on the right side above the wedge which holds the barrel. The Mounted Rifle company (A, B, C, D, or E), and a number, is usually shown in several places as our illustration indicates. Caliber is .44. Barrel is 9" long. Trigger guard is brass and grip is walnut. A valuable distinguishing feature is the method of fastening the loading lever, with an internal spring near the pivot-pin.

Undoubtedly, some of these immensely valuable Colts are yet undiscovered. With the demand increasing steadily, a "Walker" is a prize worth seeking!

Fascinating Beyond Measure Are The . . .

Antiques of Chemistry

By Dwight W. Carlisle

The alchemist of old, generally concerned with what is properly the physicists' world—that of converting base metals into gold—was the chief hocus-pocus artist of the middle ages. He invented alembics, retorts, and other items of metal, pottery, or glass, which have been useful for many centuries. Meanwhile, chemistry became an honored science.

In our American scene, Stiegel and other pre-revolutionary glassmakers produced "chymical" vessels. But it is with our early Federal era that we began using chemistry commercially, industrially, and in the arts. And so the production of apparatus was stepped up, and a wide variety of wares was made. It is from these that we can draw most of our collectible items and, at the same time, use them as criteria for the identification of other similar, and earlier, vessels. We should be concerned primarily with the items used in home experiments and the home workshop. The retort and the alembic were used in simple distilling. Many early kitchens had them—if not in chemical glassware, in pottery or in metal—to distill a bit of essence or water from herbs and flowers.

There are some beaker glasses which are simply funnel shaped, footed wines with a small pouring nose in the rim. "Spouted wines; very rare" is the description given to one displayed at an antiques show! Mortars and pestles are sufficiently well known to require no picturing here; spatulas were in every kitchen. But boiling glasses and freezing

The Salmon Urn Stove

THAT things of beauty were made in the 1870s, before the Centennial Exposition of 1876, and that American designers were scanning the past for ideas, is not a secret. But there was so much ugly furniture and furnishings made that we are apt to lose sight of the good. Certainly among the good is the down draft ventilating urn stove designed by T. H. Salmon in 1872, based upon Benjamin Franklin's Urn Stove of 1750 but with the unmistakable touch of the Baroque revival of its day and age. This stove, of cast iron, stood on the floor. Internally its basket grate was first loaded with coal, kindling placed over it, and then paper. A match applied started the stove going, the draft entering the top of the urn and going down to a smoke chamber and off through a vent to the stove pipe which could enter the flue directly back of the stove. Ash fell through the smoke chamber into a box at the bottom of the stove. The grate is solidly constructed without tilt, riddle or shake bars. A simple poker was all that was needed to tend and renew the fire. When the coals were ignited the urn top could be removed and the top used for light cooking. The primary purpose of this highly decorative and highly desirable stove was space heating a chamber. Note the heraldic device of hand grasping baton used as a handle on the lid, or top, the gracefully swirling vents or draft orifices, the Grecian handles on the urn and the ancient grape decorative motif. Here, indeed, is a stove worthy of seeking. For a small room it would be more fun than a fireplace.

glasses are not so recorded; these were for the library, where "philosophy" was indulged in. An apparatus for making soda water, not the "gasogene" of Sherlock Holmes' fame, but a machine invented by Dr. Nooth, was in some homes. These, together with other items of chemical glassware are pictured. If you have an urge to collect such items, let yourself go. As will be observed, the antiques of chemistry are mostly of glass. There are containers, lamps, and other objects of metal, ranging from silver through pewter, and there are some items of apparatus made of the rare metals . . . of platinum, and of gold. Platinum, of course, was the metal most favored because of its great quality of heating to red heat quickly and yet melting only at inordinately high temperature; at a degree seldom achieved even in the chemist's hottest furnaces.

Our pictures are merely exemplary. We have collected over 100 early illustrations such as these. The ones shown, however, represent a type and kind of object you might meet with today or tomorrow. Then you'll know: it is an antique of chemistry.

A Mountain Music Rebec

We have access to President Millard Fillmore's copy of Bohn's Dictionary of Obsolete and Provincial English. It states a Rebec is "a sort of violin" and that the term is Anglo-Norman. Actually the name of the instrument is from the Arabic, Rabab. It is an elongated pear-shaped, three-stringed instrument, played with a bow or plucked with the fingers. One string is for the air, or tune, the others are tunes in fifths, to furnish a sort of strumming accompaniment to the air. Rebecs were used by many of the non-Puritanic settlers in the Virginia-Maryland-Carolina region. The descendants of 17th century settlers who pushed Westward into the foothills carried the instruments with them. Others continued making the instruments and there are a few makers of the Rebec to this day. They are favored in jug bands, for Mountain Music, and are more fun than five guitars or eight ukeleles. If you like Mountain Music, and we do. Anyone have a Rebec? Let us hear from music-happy owners!

How Others Use Their Antiques

Chester Woodin does, and so can you!

Use one of your collections to . . .

Decorate Your Office

THAT collections need not be confined to the home but may sometimes be even more effectively displayed elsewhere, led Mr. Chester Woodin, owner and manager of the Arrow Collection Service in Schenectady, N. Y. to choose his office as the suitable home for his collection of shaving mugs. Such barbershop items, he feels, belong in a masculine world—and what more suitable spot than a man's office?

Cubbyholed in a wooden wall rack, made especially for the purpose, the mugs with their colorful insignia and golden names represent a past era—and years of collecting efforts, effort made all the more difficult since the pictorialized mugs are confined to subjects from the Schenectady locale. Perhaps Mr. Woodin's prize mug is one showing J. N. Voorhees Livery and Boarding Stables. Another favorite shows Chapman's Ice Cart with a man standing in the rear as well as one in the foreground. To find a mug with a hearse is still his unrealized ambition.

Mr. Woodin is to be congratulated—and emulated—for his discrimination in confining his collection to his own area, for not only does his collection arouse much interest among "old timers" and provide a ready flow of reminiscence, but it also supplies a chapter in local history for those concerned with old names and occupations—a personalized City Directory! Also interested in Indian lore, Mr. Woodin has a vast collection of arrowheads. Here again his special interest lies in the many examples dug up around his mountain cabin.

It was through his good friend, Clarence T. Hubbard whose "Cullings from a Collector" have appeared in Spinning Wheel that we learned of Mr. Woodin and his collections. "And," Mr. Hubbard writes, "in addition to being an active business man and collector, Chester Woodin is an archaeologist, ventriloquist, and historian. He is also considered one of the country's finest sleight of hand coin manipulators, non-professional." Of such wide interests are collectors born!

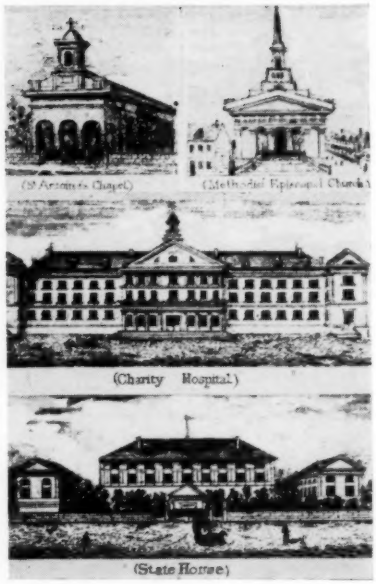
Prints From A New Orleans Directory of 1838

By CANDICE WENDT

IN 1838, John Gibson of New Orleans compiled a Guide and Directory of the State of Louisiana, and of the Cities of New Orleans and Lafayette. My copy was one disposed of by the Essex Institute in the 1930s. In it I discovered that B. Abadie conducted a furniture store at 227 Royal Street; that the John Adams' cabinet shop was at Marais near Ursuline; that T. Adams cabinet shop was at 77 Anne Street; also that D. Barjou maintained a furniture warehouse at St. Philip and Royal Street and that Xavier Benoit did cabinetwork at his shop at number 136 on the Street of Great Men. The names therein, most all French with a sprinkling of Swiss, Dutch and Spanish represent more cabinetmakers per thousand of population than any other documentation that has come to this writer's attention.

Some collectors may have picked up, here and there in the South, what appear to be large and fancy paper pill boxes. On the covers of these are invariably small colored engravings of New Orleans churches. Those engravings come from Gibson's Directory! There is a page of eight of these views in a complete copy. Also, there is a page of four market houses, a page of three theatres, a page showing the Arcade Baths, a sugar refinery, and the Levee Cotton Press; another page showing the Banks Arcade, the Merchants Exchange, Citizen's Bank, and City Bank. One other full page print which is really an advertisement pictures the establishment of E. Johns & Company, a combined pianoforte, music, stationery and lithographic establishment.

Here we have the source of certain New Orleans souvenirs of antebellum days and, it may be suspected, the lithographers and plate printers who made these insert illustrations for



Mr. Gibson, made them also as sheets for the many fancy stores of the city.

New Orleans was not, primarily, a city providing goods only for its own use and consumption. It was the storehouse for at least two states, and the luxury center for important buyers from five states. This explains why there were so many good cabinetmakers, silversmiths, gunsmiths, watchmakers, jewelers, and fancy stores. Why there were luxury hotels and large theatres.

It is of course impossible to suggest where one might find, other than perhaps in the Vieux Carre or Royal Street, fancy boxes or little trumeau mirrors with these pictures, carefully colored, as inserts. But here is not suggestion, but fact: they can be found in a complete copy of Gibson's Guide & Directory for 1838. It is, at this writing, 118 years old.

Now New Orleans is by no means the only American city to publish such a directory. While directories of this sort may not abound, they do exist, and can be found in antiquarian bookstores today. Any any true antiquarian knows that the seller of old books and documents cannot be bypassed if he is serious in his collecting pursuit.
